

The Courier-Journal takes a decided stand against woman's rights as advocated by Susan and Anna and G. F. T., etc., etc. But perhaps the C. J. is right notwithstanding. Just hear what it says on the subject:

"Now and then the females who do a woman's rights business under the name and style of Termagent, Virago & Co. (for which great house Anna Dickenson, Mrs. Susan B. Anthony and others are dreaming), start a new notion and are ready to scratch out the world's eyes that won't agree with them. Anna Dickenson has been prowling about in Utah and the thing that grieved her most was that women did not ride—well, like men. She is making war on panniers and petticoats and wants them abolished, especially with a view to introducing the new method of riding. She has given her ideas in two garrulous columns about the matter. If there is anything indecent which these strong-minded, weak-headed women have not suggested it should be pointed out. They get worse and worse and are gradually becoming more brazen and indecent. The whole tea party of them ought to be put to pounding heap in some house of correction instead of being permitted to fill the minds of foolish girls with a mass of prurient trash and insubordination. What with "Jenkins," Geo. Francis Train, Woman's Rights, and Fisk Jr., the din is becoming intolerable.

A letter from William Bradford, the artist of the expedition, dated Iqviut, Greenland, July 27th, describes the Eisblinken, one of the largest of the glaciers, which is constantly discharging immense icebergs into the sea, the whole shore of which is lined with them. He says: The sea is dotted with these great white floating islands, which are often from one to three hundred feet high. In a single view I have seen many hundreds. We were fortunate enough to witness seven bergs discharge in the manner first described, I believe, by Dr. Hayes; and although we were at one time exposed to some danger, and lost a part of our photographic materials by the wave which rolled thirty feet high upon the rocks, yet all of the party escaped without personal accident. The photographic party heard the crash and saw the wave coming in time to climb the rocks, and thus escape being washed into the sea, meeting with no further mishap than a good ducking from the crest of the sea. It was a narrow and providential escape. I was on the vessel at the time, making a study in oil of the glacier front, which is two hundred feet high, and had we been nearer to the shore, we should have been in all probability dashed to pieces."

To a people living in a law-and order town like Tucson, such proceedings as those contained in the following, copied from the local of the Woodland Mail, will suggest the necessity of immediate reform there:

"On Tuesday evening three different buildings were fired in this town and on Wednesday night three or four more attempts were made to burn the place. At last mentioned time the ruffians commenced operations by placing a can of powder beneath the ground floor of a Chinese wash house and blowing up the institution. The Johns were terribly frightened but not seriously damaged in person. Half an hour afterwards fires were kindled in buildings situated in localities some distance apart—rumor has it from three to six in number."

Rev. T. K. Beecher employs the following argument in condemnation of woman's rights:

Man governs himself because he is stronger, and in this world all debated questions are settled sooner or later by force. Moral influence and public opinion control, because they imply reserved force. In the rough and tumble of life no man need fear the competition of woman. In a general scramble she has all to lose and little to gain, except a right to scramble. In this rule world of force and matter, strength, when acknowledged by weakness, often becomes magnanimous, chivalrous, God-like. But strength, challenged to a race, asks and gives no quarter. For woman's sake, we hate the very sound of the words—"Woman's Rights."

The state of society is such at Leavenworth that one of its papers gives this advice: "If you happen to meet two men who formerly lived in the same town, don't introduce them to each other, because the chances are in this unhappy country, that at least one of them, probably both, did something mean, and ran away, and don't want to talk about it."
